

360 Degree Consultancy Private Limited

(CIN: U65910DL2014PTC268822)

343, Atulya Apartments, Sector-18B, Dwarka, New Delhi-78

Tel: 011-43038002

E-mail: contact@360degree.biz

---

Newsletter-April 2015

The verdict of the trial court against a celebrity and stay on the same by the High Court has been appreciated and criticized simultaneously. The good and bad part of our judicial system has come to the light in a span of just two days. If the bad part was that the trial court took 13 years to pronounce its verdict, the good part is that the same judicial system worked in super efficient manner to postpone the punishment awarded by the trial court. Though, the difference between a common man and a celebrity has been made prominent by these decisions, the learning of the incidence is that the courts have the capability and capacity to adjudicate as soon as it is willing to.

This brings into picture the most important element called willingness. It is a mental framework to strive for a particular direction. The willingness may not ensure achievement of the objective instantly but the direction chosen with good conscience will assure that success can not escape you. However, it is important to qualify success as a milestone that serves our fellowmen. That means our success is tied up with the goalposts of our societal beings. In simple words, there has to be a real win-win situation for qualifying an act as successful. There can not be situation where one wins and the other lose out as this breeds discontentment in the person loosing out. The discontented person in our surroundings will spell out negative vibes and we will be affected by those vibes in one way or the other. The vibes create an aura around us and mould our thinking in that manner, thereby, impacting our actions for the future. The negative vibes will always force us to act in a negative manner and this vicious circle will not help us in succeeding continuously. It is a well known fact that consistent performance is the hallmark of success and one time achievements are just brushed away and forgotten.

Thus willingness to turn into success requires perseverance and continuous efforts in that direction chosen with good conscience. It reminds me of the completion of one year of the present national government and their visible achievements, that is talked about in the past month. The painstaking efforts of the government in bringing transparency to its working, cutting down on the red tape, containing corruption at the top, fixing responsibility for the work and weeding out unnecessary rules and regulations are showing the intent to set things right that have gone awry. This to me is clearly showing the willingness in right earnest. However, to achieve sustainable success, these efforts have to percolate to the lowest level of governmental working and into the consciousness of every individual.

I am confident that these efforts will bring fruits albeit with a lag. Instead of terming the High Court judgment on Mr. Salman Khan as an exercise in haste, it should be considered as a consequence of the efforts put in for good governance, where quick decision making is known as a virtue.